Art Unit: 2614

1. The title of the invention is not descriptive. A new title is required that is clearly indicative of the invention to which the claims are directed. Note MPEP 606.01.

2. The lengthy specification has not been checked to the extent necessary to determine the presence of all possible minor errors. Applicant's cooperation is requested in correcting any errors of which applicant may become aware in the specification.

3. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1 and 6 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Berman et al. in view of Tults '423.

The adjustable data slicer of Berman (element 25, part of the overall data extraction arrangement shown in Fig. 2.) is detailed in Fig. 7d. Initial sync chip clamping is included (noting element 23). Auxiliary data is superimposed into a prescribed signal having predetermined specifications (i.e. the VBI being of specific amplitude and period and having run-in clock of specific parameters as well). The data extraction arrangement initial involves separating the sync data from the composite input video signal (noting element 24), and then identifying and separating the 21st line (using element 29) only during the period of the detected line (col. 11 lines 13-30). Window pulse generation is also discussed as is its application during the line detection, in general terms (col. 14 lines 49-51). The processing implemented upon detection the 21st line during the specific windowed time includes averaging the prescribed superimposed signal, and the data slicer (detailed in Fig. 7d) involves sampling and holding the average voltage of the prescribed run-in signal during that time period, wherein direct current is added when necessary so based on the detected slice level (col. 10 lines 51-68).

Tults also discloses an adjustable slicer (noting particularly Figs. 2, 2A, 4 and 5) but unlike Berman, specifies the generation and application of the windowing component as it responds to the line 21 detection circuit (element 290, line 21 ID output only during the period of the detection (291: Fig. 2A); a window pulse generated in response to the detected line 21 (col. 5 line 22+).

It would accordingly have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to use any suitable windowing circuitry as shown by Tults, to effectively process the data extracted from line 21 in the specific time frame allowed by the window, thereby meeting claims 1 and 6.

4. The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure.

5. Claims 2-5 and 7-10 appear allowable over the prior art.
